JnU students, trader clash leave 5 injured

JnU Correspondent

AT LEAST five people, including a policeman were injured in a clash between Jagannath University students and traders of Patuatuli market in the capital on Sunday following an altercation over purchasing a wrist watch.

The traders alleged that the clash erupted around 1:00pm as a few of the students tried to pay less than the actual price of a wrist watch.

Both groups got into arguments and that three students were beaten by the traders, students and local people said.

Of the three students, Arnov was given medical treatment at a nearby hospital. On information, students from the public university teamed up and marched towards the market.

Police, however, intervened and brought the situation under control, said Kotwali police assistant commissioner, Shahen Shah. A member of police was injured after being hit by a brick chip thrown by the traders, police said.

The university proctor, Noor Muhammad, said that they asked the traders to settle the matter with the students or face legal action.
