Computer installed at BARC

By A Staff Reporter

For developing the skills of the scientists of the agricultural research system, the Bangladesh Agricultural Research Council (BARC) installed a computer at BARC premises.

This IBM computer system is the first of its kind to improve the agricultural research system by way of analysing, processing and manipulating different types of data and information in Bangladesh, according to a Press release on Sunday.

To introduce the system and to train the researchers to work with computer, BARC already started phasewise training courses for the scientists and supporting staff of different institutes.

The first batch of this course ended in Dhaka at the last week of April and the course of the second batch is going to be concluded today (Monday). In each course BARC accommodating 10 trainee and they are from different research institutes.
