North South University has been recognised as one of the top universities in Bangladesh, as revealed by the esteemed Times Higher Education World University Rankings 2024.

The announcement was made on September 27 at the University of Sydney, Australia. Globally, NSU secured a position within the 801-1000 bracket, said a press release.

The 2024 rankings encompassed universities from 108 countries. The latest ranking underscores NSU's dedication to fostering innovation and elevating the standard of education, thereby reinforcing its stature on the global academic stage, read the release.

NSU vice-chancellor professor Atiqul Islam was present during the global unveiling of the report. He conveyed profound appreciation, remarking that the significant milestone was a testament to the collective endeavours of their esteemed faculty, the perseverance of students, the meticulous efforts of administrative team, and the steadfast backing of the NSU Board of Trustees.

Professor Islam also thanked regulatory authorities, including the ministry of education and the university grants commission, for their collaboration.

‘We welcome the other three universities, namely the University of Dhaka, Jahangirnagar University, and BRAC University, who joined us at the top position in Bangladesh. We also acknowledge the other Bangladeshi universities featured in the rankings for their continual inspiration. NSU’s mission is to cultivate future leaders, spearhead innovation, and enrich the nation’s higher education landscape,’ he added.

The Times Higher Education World University Rankings are renowned for spotlighting the world’s premier academic institutions, particularly emphasizing research. This year’s 20th iteration of the ranking assessed over 1,900 institutions of higher learning.
