BRAC Univ introduces environment-friendly new campus

Staff Correspondent | Published at 01:02am on March 02, 2024

BRAC University hosted a 'Meet and Greet with Media' event on Thursday to introduce its new campus, where the infrastructures were built with respect to environment.

The new campus opening event was held on the university's Merul Badda area of Dhaka, which features environmental sustainability.

BRAC University authorities said that the new campus reflected their commitment to ensuring academic excellence and cultural enrichment while nurturing the environment.

Various aspects of BRAC University's dedication to environmental sustainability were showcased during the event, where the university also shared its aspiration to lead in providing a comprehensive educational experience by engaging in environment-friendly initiatives, showcasing local performances, and fostering discussions on pertinent issues.

At the event, Tamara Hasan Abed, chairperson of the board of trustees of BRAC University, professor Syed Mahfuzul Aziz, acting vice-chancellor of the university, journalists, and other members of the BoT were present.

Covering 7 acres of land in Merul Badda, the new expansive BRAC University campus is the first environment-friendly and sustainable advanced city campus in Bangladesh.

Inspired by the ecosystem of the Sundarbans, the campus has been constructed to offer a blend of nature and architecture, according to the authorities.

The design, construction, and environmental aspects of the building involve experts from various countries, including Singapore, China, and Germany, who contribute to its various unique features.

The building utilises modern technologies such as cross-ventilation and hybrid thermal management systems, allowing light and air to enter from all sides.
