Farm education

Dear Editor :

It is gratifying to note that the government would establish a new agricultural college in Dinajpur after the name of the veteran peasant leader late Haji Mohammad Danesh. The decision has recently been announced by the President at a peasant conference of the Jatiya Krishak Party.

As an Agricultural scientist I am confident the new agriculture college would significantly contribute in the process of country's development by generating scientific manpower in agriculture.

Meanwhile, it would be further appreciated if the government could set up a few more agricultural colleges in different parts of the country and one more agricultural university by converting the country's first and oldest agricultural educational institution, i.e. Bangladesh Agricultural College, Dhaka into an agricultural university.

Yours truly,
MD. ZAHIDUL HAQUE,
