

Engineering college at every district

Engineering knowhow is a vital factor and pre-requisite to develop a nation. Ours is an under-developed country. For developing our country, more engineers and technicians are required to cope with the pace of works. But in comparison to need, we have engineers and technicians in the country. There is a little scope to learn technical know-how.

Because of this fact, at least one Engineering College should be established in each district and one Vocational or Technical School in each Thana. Of course, the present government has decided to set up a Vocational or Technical School in each thana. This is a most praise-worthy decision no doubt. But no attempt appears to have been taken to set up Engineering College in each district though we feel that such colleges are a must.

I think the government should consider this issue most seriously and arrange to establish one Engineering College in every district. I, being an inhabitant of Faridpur district, request the authority concerned to kindly establish one Engineering College at Faridpur. I hope that the authority will kindly give a patient thinking over the matter and try to do the needful.
