Passing examinations

Though shocking yet it is true that there are parents and guardians who indirectly encourage a failure of their wards in examinations. A negligence to one's duty is a pity because when a student of SSC or HSC fail to pass in all the subjects the board does not allow the student to advance into the next higher classes.

But the parents and guardians are all out to fight against this rule of law and try to prove that one need not learn and pass in all the subjects. But the persons concerned do not demand that these subjects should be removed altogether!

What is the way to defend the ignorant young boys and girls and to protect one who fails to perform one's duty sincerely? These parents and guardians may sometimes demand that no child should have to pass the SSC or the HSC examinations either.
