Transport for female students

A Sharmin

children leaving the household chores unattended. Either they have to stay the whole day at school or they leave the children and come back home to collect their children later on. The plight of mothers who have small children (babies) and no reliable person to take care of them can well be imagined. Having no option often a mother is seen at a school campus with little babies in her arms and waiting impatiently for the school to close for the day. At some schools there is no place for these mothers to wait; they either sit outside the school walls on bricks or have to stand when it rains. As things stand, if all educational institutions had their own transport system it would be a great help to the children and guardians. This is an issue which needs to be looked into seriously. Private companies can also come to solve the crisis.
