Non-govt pry teachers have to face competency test

The government has decided to take a competency test of the teachers recruited for the registered non-government primary schools (RNGPs) before July 1, 1992 and have been receiving government share of their salary without attaining necessary educational qualifications.

According to the decision, the teachers will have to submit the prescribed form, duly filled-up, to the Upazila Education Office, on or before August 20.

The Upazila Education Officers have already distributed this form among the teachers concerned.

This competency test will be held by the end of September next simultaneously throughout the country. The exact date for the exam will be notified in due time. The duration of the examination has been fixed for three hours.

The syllabus of the exam has been finalized based on the necessary competency level required to teach in the primary level. To make this examination effective, there will be a training program for the teachers. National Academy of Primary Education (NAPE) will inform all concerned regarding this programme.

This competency test will be held only once and the teachers will not get government share of their salary if they fail to pass this exam or do not participate in the same.

The Ministry of Primary and Mass Education requests concerned teachers to register their names and attend training programs to facilitate the competency test.
